Preventing Social Media Scams

Social media sites seem to be harmless - millions of users reconnecting with old friends, posting pictures from the latest vacation or even sending mass messages about a current activity.

Over 11 million Americans were victims of identity theft last year. Sites divulging any amount of personal information can give thieves the opportunity to steal your identity or phish for enough information to steal your identity. The personal information shared on sites such as Facebook, MySpace, and Twitter, can pose a substantial threat to your identity. Some easy ways to protect yourself include:

1. Protect your personal information online - never give out personal information on the web, regardless of who's asking for it
2. Change Privacy Setting - many of these sites allow you to manage how much information different categories of users can see (i.e. "friends" versus "friends of friends")
3. Create profiles on major social media sites to prevent others from being able to impersonate you (called Cyber sitting). Websites such as www.knowem.com offer a quick and free way to check availability of your name on over 120 sites
4. Examine privacy policies of social networking sites - this growing trend is also a growing threat: ask social networking sites to provide indentity monitoring to their users.

"Mike, Just a quick note of thanks. We had a bank robbery in Denver early this morning and within minutes your staff Corey, Maria, Earl and Ryan all contacted me and offered their assistance with whatever we may need in the way of video retrieval."
